

Children and young people under 18 years with eating disorders

Guidelines for educational professionals

These guidelines give advice about spotting the signs of eating disorders and when to refer children and young people to your local community eating disorders service (CEDS) for specialist support.

Eating disorders can affect anyone. The stereotype that someone with an eating disorder is a young, white, underweight female, is dangerous as can result in other people being missed, e.g. males or those who are a healthy weight or overweight. Getting treatment earlier can make a positive difference in someone's recovery, therefore it is vital to keep an open mind when thinking about who may be affected and act quickly if you suspect an eating disorder.

What to do next

If you are not sure how to bring your concerns up with the young person, phone your local CEDS for advice (contact details overleaf). They can give you helpful tips. Don't wait and see what happens.

- o Early help is VERY important
- o You are not expected to be an expert - just someone who knows the young person and is worried

Children and young people DO NOT need to be referred by their GP - YOU CAN REFER. In some areas young people and parents can also refer themselves.

Education professionals can make a direct referral to CEDS

- o If you refer then let the young person and parents know beforehand
- o Let CEDS know who gave consent
- o If consent is refused, then phone your CEDS for advice

Spotting the signs

- o Are they becoming withdrawn in lessons?
- o Do you think they have lost or gained weight?

- o Are they isolating themselves from their friends?
- o Are they commenting more on their own body and appearance?

Outside the classroom:

- o Have they changed their behaviours around food at school/college?
- o Are they avoiding the lunch areas?
- o Are they secluding themselves at lunchtime or break time?
- o Are they sitting around peers but not eating?
